

Tuesday 10th June 2010

Dear Y11 Parent

As the main GCSE examinations are now underway we have reached the point when Y11 students are no longer needed in school full-time. By the afternoon of Friday 11th June they will have done all the English and Maths exams and completed assessments in many other subjects. Therefore, after Friday, they will only be required to attend:

- Coursework catch-up sessions
- Exams
- Revision / exam preparation sessions

Students will be told separately if they are required for coursework catch-up (Tues 15 June, Thursday 17 and Fri 18 June). If they are listed for these please understand that it is essential that they turn up in order to maximise their success. The options available to them in the future will be greater if they have more qualifications and/or higher levels of attainment. The teachers supporting these sessions will be fully prepared and are giving up time to ensure the students have the best opportunity to succeed.

It is vitally important that students continue to attend the revision sessions planned for their exams after 11 June. If they have forgotten when these are they can check review on the school website. The extra preparation that students can do in these will be the icing on the cake of all that they are doing at home.

We say "Well done" to all of our students for getting to this point and achieving everything they have so far. We wish them all the best in the rest of their exams and look forward to seeing many of them back with us for the Sixth Form induction and, if not, at least at the Prom and, on results day!

Yours faithfully

Mrs Barbara E Easton
